Argued at Length.

Mr. Marshall Dinwiddie appeared in court as the "next friend" of the minor children of the ex-Mayor, who are the heirs of his estate. The insurance company contended through counsel that the commission of murder, with the equivalent death penalty, as provided by the laws of the State, would be in principle equivalent to suicide, a contingency expressly reserved in the contract between McCue and the insurance company.

Messrs. Harman and Walker and G. B. Sinclair, of Charlottesville, appear as counsel for Mr. Dinwiddle and his wards—J. William, Samuel O., Harry M. and Ruby G. McCue. The insurance company was represented by Hon. William H. White, of Richmond, and Mr. The three judges sitting are opening of the February term of the afternoon the court heard oral argument. which says:
"Public policy is an unruly house, and when once you get astride of it you never know where it may carry you. It may lead you from sound law; it is never argued at all but when all other points fail."

The facts of the case, as shown from the briefs filed by both sides, seem to be that on February, 1964, J. Samuel McCue made application for a ten-year ronewable $15,000 policy in the com-pany, through Carroll and Flizgerald, pany, through Carroll and Fitzgeral solicitors, and T. A.
